

The Nation's Health, November 2009, Volume 39, No. 9

Nation

Value of prevention debated as part of U.S. health reform: Studies ask: Is prevention cost-effective?

Rabies cases a continuing threat to global public health: Ancient disease still a modern problem

HHS to award $650 million in new prevention-oriented grant effort

Studies find retail-based health clinics can offer lower-cost care

Greenhouse gas standards to improve fuel usage, lower car emissions

Mercury is widespread in U.S. fish, streams, federal survey reports

Nation in brief

Health reform in brief

State/Local

North Carolina door-to-door health campaign fighting syphilis, HIV

States in brief

Globe

Global deaths among youth largely preventable, new WHO study finds

Globe in brief

General

Health Findings

Healthy You

APHA News

APHA's Annual Meeting held in Philadelphia this month: 10,500 attendees expected Nov. 7–11

APHA books showcase ethical issues in public health practice

Get Ready Day events draw attention to preparedness: APHA hosts third annual celebration at D.C. elementary school

Health professionals: Get certified in public health through exam

APHA member groups organize myriad events at Annual Meeting

President's Column: 'Guyana' for a year filled with hope, hospitality and kindness: Parting words from APHA's president

APHA Advocates

Journal Watch

Letters

On the Job

Thirty health departments to test public health accreditation effort

On the job briefs

Student Focus

Students support chiropractic's future with letter-writing campaign

College campus program to prevent alcohol poisoning goes nationwide

Students march in support of health equity, ending health disparities

Three chiropractic colleges fund student memberships in APHA

Students in brief

Web-only stories

Online only: Americans living longer as deaths decline

Online only: Local governments can take steps to fight childhood obesity

Online only: Millions in U.S. at risk for suicide, groundbreaking study finds

Newsmakers: November 2009

Resources: November 2009